2021 Cynthia Manning, or Tia

as she was known at the Higher Learning Institute by her friends, was part of the predictor program initiated by the High Tribune centuries before. She was one of the selected few who, through generations of doctors exploring the origins of life and cognitive thought process, had become the enhanced children of the peace project. Her and her peer's job was to study the histories of the world compared to the current state of affairs, and predict the best way to ensure that the centuries of peace should continue for centuries more.

Tia sat with this realization in class often wondering why she was chosen for the program.

No doubt she was a predictor, a person who was able to analyze the chess board and see the end moves, all just by looking at the players trembling hands and eye gestures before the first pawn finished sliding from its starting square. But she didn't predict the best ways to live, only the best ways to survive. The thought of a Chancellor visiting the school had made Tia's thought process runs through several scenarios through the next few moments, filtering variables - and each time; she closed her eyes, discounted the end, and started over. If the nature was so serious that a Chancellor had to speak on the matters of reprogramming, it was more serious than anyone was letting on. She began to sweat profusely and the room started to get dim as her equilibrium drained from her body. "No No No!" she stammered as she found herself falling to her knees to the floor. Professor Evenari sat perfectly still behind her desk after posting the news on the daily board of criteria for thought projections. From the back of the room, Tia stared at her professors eyes noticing the smallest tear forming. Tia's lips quivered as her eyes reddened with tears. "Tia what's wrong!" Nari to her friend's side. Tia looked up and began trembling uncontrollably. The fears she had hidden within her soul for years were finally coming to light. Tia blinked away the streams forming on her cheeks as she whispered "War. Now." A book with superb characters, epic deaths, and twists that will leave the reader wanting to read the book again and again.
